

Contents

Giittossárdni	11
Introducing Indigenising education and citizenship	13
Torjer A. Olsen and Hilde Sollid
Premises, perspectives, and tensions	14
Indigenous education and citizenship: Diversity and interface	17
A northern starting point: Indigenising education in Sápmi?	25
Presentation of contributions	29
References	30
1. Timelines and strategies in Sami education	33
Pigga Keskitalo
Introduction	33
Historical perspectives on Sami education	36
Review of the premises of contemporary Sami education	38
Current tendencies with similarities and differences	44
Conclusion	45
References	46
2. Sámi education between law and politics – The Sámi-Norwegian context	53
Else Grete Broderstad
Introduction	53
A relational approach to self-determination; a procedural approach to Sámi rights’ recognition	56
Elements of Sámi education policies: From post-war change to the current state of the art	59
The policy field of Sámi education through the lenses of stages of rights recognition	64
Conclusion	69
References	70
3. Governing Indigenous citizenship in Australia: From objects and partial subjects to coexisting sovereign citizens?	74
Diane Smith
Introduction	74
Indigenous citizenships	76

Governmental control of Indigenous subject citizens	80
Education as a governmental tool for citizenship	82
Indigenous advocacy: Reclaiming citizenships	84
Conclusion: Co-existing sovereign citizenships	88
References	89
4. Equality of opportunity and democratic equality in the case of Indigenous citizenship	93
Kjersti Fjørtoft
Introduction	93
Part I: Equality of opportunity versus democratic equality	97
Part II: Democratic equality – A relational concept of equality	101
Conclusion: Education for democratic equality and equality of opportunity	109
References	110
5. Conceptualizing Indigenous citizenship: The Norwegian core curriculum and citizenship as shared fate	113
Annamari Vitikainen
Introduction	113
I The New Norwegian core curriculum: Values and principles for primary and secondary education	115
II The core curriculum and citizenship theory	117
III Citizenship as shared fate vs. citizenship as shared identity.	121
IV Citizenship as shared fate and the core curriculum	125
V Citizenship as shared fate and the core curriculum: Some cautionary remarks	127
References	131
6. Sámi language education policy and citizenship in Norway	133
Hilde Sollid
Introducing Sámi language education policy	133
Theoretical perspectives	135
Methodological perspectives and presentation of data	137
Historical perspectives on language and citizenship in Norway.	139
Discourses in Sámi subject language curricula 1974–2020	140
Discussion.	147
Final remarks	149
References	150

7. Globalised language and culture policy borrowing for Aotearoa: Colonisation, history and language power	153
Sharon Harvey
Introduction	153
Background on the CEFR and ICC	155
European language policy arrives in Aotearoa	158
Interpreting ICC for New Zealand teachers	163
Pointing a way forward for iCLT, particularly in postcolonial contexts?...	165
Conclusion	168
References	169
8. ‘I know the world in two languages’: Sámi multilingual citizenship in textbooks for the school subject Norwegian between 1997 and 2020	173
Åse Mette Johansen and Elin Furu Markusson
The socio-historical embeddedness of Sámi content in textbooks for the school subject Norwegian	174
Curricular trajectories	176
Theoretical perspectives, methods, and data	178
Analysis	180
Towards Indigenised perspectives on multilingual citizenship within the politics of the ordinary?	187
Final remarks	191
References	191
9. ‘Not good enough for anyone?’ Managing Sámi education in the cultural interface	195
Torjer A. Olsen
Introduction	195
Context and background	197
On data, method, and methodology	199
‘Not good enough for anyone’: The feeling of being in-between	201
‘Mission impossible’?	205
Hierarchy, demands and diversity	207
Discussion: From practice and pedagogy to power and politics	209
References	211
10. It may be invisible to you but it still affects us: Extending the comprehensive view on language and writing	214
Hanna Outakoski
Introduction	214
Short overview of Sámi literacy contexts in compulsory schooling	217
Identifying a need for a theoretical expansion	220

Writing instruction in the Indigenous Sámi context	223
Extending the comprehensive view on language and writing	229
Summary	232
Acknowledgements	233
References	233
Attachment 10.1: Summary of the project methodology and data.	236
11. Mother-tongue education for the Omaheke Jul'hoansi in Namibia: Between policy and practice	237
Velina Ninkova
Introduction	237
Background: The people and the language	240
Namibian education policy and language development from a global and national perspective	241
The local language policy in the Omaheke region	243
Barriers to implementation	245
Consequences of the lack of mother-tongue education for the Jul'hoansi	248
Conclusion	251
References	252
12. 'We don't talk about Sámi versus Norwegian; we talk about us.' Local articulations of education practices in Sápmi	255
Kristin Evju
Introduction	255
Theoretical and methodological reflections	256
Kåfjord: Historical places and educational spaces	257
Analysis of local education practices	261
Discussion	270
Final remarks	271
References	272
13. Sámi pupils' language beliefs and practices as implicit language policy	275
Kristina Belančić
Introduction	275
The Sámi context and the Sámi schools	276
Swedish language education policy	277
Theoretical perspectives	278
Indigenous peoples' formal and informal policy making	279
Method and material	281
Findings	283
Discussion	288
References	291

14. The role of cultural connectedness and ethnic group belonging to the social-emotional wellbeing of diverse students	294
Melinda Webber and Selena Waru-Benson
Introduction	294
Racial-ethnic identity development in school contexts	296
The New Zealand context	298
Te Tiriti o Waitangi – A key consideration in the New Zealand curriculum	299
Methodology	300
Findings and discussion	302
Conclusion	308
References	309
15. The power of place and the ‘good citizen’	313
William Fogarty and Hilde Sollid
The ‘good citizen’ and education	314
An Indigenous place	317
Pedagogy of place	319
Final remarks	326
References	327
Seaibi	331
Hilde Sollid and Torjer A. Olsen
Indigenous education in the time of a global pandemic	331
Dilemmas	332
The value of international and interdisciplinary collaboration	334
Authors	337