

Contents

Part 1 Setting the stage

Introduction	11
Bengt Molander, Thomas Netland, and Mattias Solli
1. Knowing our ways about in the world	17
Bengt Molander
1. Starting points	17
2. Knowing how to go on – being in time	21
3. The importance of habits and routines	25
4. Practices are the medium of knowledge	29
5. How we meet the world – and ourselves – in the world	34
Bibliography	40
2. Reflections on the myth of the primordial	42
Alva Noë
1. Starting points	42
2. What myth?	43
3. Entanglement	45
4. Attending to the world/transforming ourselves	47
Bibliography	48
3. On the genesis of theory: Heidegger and pragmatism	49
Zhenhua Yu
1. Introduction	49
2. The change-over model	50
3. The extension model	55
4. Response, defense, and revision	59
Bibliography	68

Part 2 Knowing how/routines and habits

4. Acting automatically: Ryle on habits and knowing how	73
Lars Hertzberg
1. The intellectualist fallacy	73
2. A note on vocabulary	77
3. Skill vs. habit	79
Bibliography	84

5. Is knowing how a natural kind?	85
Jonathan Knowles
1. Introduction	85
2. The recent “knowing how” versus “knowing that” debate.	88
3. Knowledge how as skilful coping and as perceptual understanding	92
4. Mediating between the logical space of reasons and enactivist cognitive science	99
Bibliography	101
6. Paying attention alone and together: The role of attention in the formation and cultivation of habits	103
James McGuirk
1. Introduction	103
2. Habit as embodied agency	104
3. Habit as targeted attending.	109
4. The emergence of habitual attending	112
5. “Pay attention!”: Directions for future research	119
Bibliography	119
 Part 3 Musical practices
7. Jazz, real-time interaction, and aesthetic presence	123
Bjørn Alterhaug
1. Introduction	123
2. Report from a studio recording.	125
3. Trubbel	127
4. Aesthetic presence	129
5. Thorough preparation.	133
6. Art was born in the act of improvising.	135
Bibliography	138
8. Reflection in communicative jazz action.	140
Mattias Solli and Thomas Netland
1. Jazz is ear music.	140
2. Reflection-in-action as an act of the linguistic body	143
3. Schön’s four statements: Analysis and discussion.	146
4. Reflection in communicative action is participatory and open-ended sense-making	157
Bibliography	161

Part 4 Seeing bodies/being bodies

9. Looking and making visible	167
Gisela Bengtsson
1. Introduction	167
2. The practice of croquis drawing	169
3. The task and goal of croquis drawing	169
4. Two aspects of the process of drawing	171
5. Looking without thinking	172
6. Drawing without thinking	176
7. Dissolving the appearance of paradox	177
8. Making visible	179
Bibliography	182
10. Knowing and acknowledging trauma – psychoanalysis, phenomenology, and the lived body	184
Ståle Finke
1. Introduction	184
2. The scene of seduction and the communicative body	186
3. The phenomenology of the passive body	189
4. Imitation, symbolization, and the enactment of trauma	191
5. Trauma and recovery	197
Bibliography	205
Authors and musicians	209