

Contents

1. Crafting in a more-than-human world	9
Per Ingvar Haukeland and Biljana C. Fredriksen
A language older than words	10
Wayfaring journeys of becoming	18
Bridging sustainability and attunement	21
Different chapters, different journeys	22
Open renderings for new horizons	26
References	27
2. Teaching, learning, tuning: Towards eco-centric aesthetic learning processes in craft education	30
Helene Illeris and Kirstine Riis
Introduction	30
Aesthetic learning processes (ALPs)	31
A performative research approach	32
Structure of the text	33
Part I: Three narratives on sustainability education through wood crafting – teaching, learning, and tuning	34
Teaching	34
Learning	36
Tuning	38
Part 2: Towards eco-centric aesthetic learning processes in craft education: Subjectivation, togetherness, and environment	41
Subjectivation	41
Togetherness	42
Environment	42
Closing remarks – eco-centric approach to aesthetic learning processes	43
References	44
3. A heartbeat of an old oak: The emergence of embodied experiential metaphors as signs of human compassion with trees	47
Tollef Thorsnes and Biljana C. Fredriksen
Introduction	47
The contexts and approach	49
Theory	52

Multimodality and the sense of touch	52
Embodied experiential metaphor.	53
Drawing process as a vehicle for ecological awareness	55
Analysis and the results	56
The frames of action.	57
Metaphorical connection about life transitions	59
The journey of life.	62
Compassionate connections	63
The emergence of ecological awareness through drawing.	65
References.	68
4. The original room – in the making as a tool for understanding	71
Gertrud Olsson
Introduction	71
Methods of teaching	72
The theoretical foundation of the course	74
The beauty of nature related to fractals and mathematical relations	76
The rediscovery in the 19th century of the original room.	77
Students’ reflections about their process of making, October 2020	78
Discussion during a revisit of the construction site	82
Some final reflections and inspiration for further teaching.	85
Acknowledgements	88
References.	88
5. Crafting with nature: Rock paintings as Art of relations in embodied relational learning	89
Ulla Valovesi and Biljana C. Fredriksen
Introduction	90
Rock art and Sami nature shrines, the sieidi	91
The more-than-human world at Salmijärvi rock art site	92
The Art of relations	98
Embodied relational learning	100
Crafting a relationship with nature	101
References.	102
6. Why is it hard to listen to a rock? Questioning geophilia, geopower, and material agency in sculpting Larvikite.	106
Biljana C. Fredriksen and Martin Kuhn
Facilitating the ground for conversations with rocks.	106
Rock affection	106
Introducing Larvikite.	107
Epistemology that welcomes rocks’ agency.	109
Creating a diffractive narrative.	110

Uncovering conflicting roles and desires	113
Noticing a silenced voice – the narrative.	113
To hear or not to hear – discussing the narrative.	115
Listening to the Earth	119
Acknowledgements	121
References.	122
7. Wind as a crafting agent: Learning from a slow engagement with time, place, and nature	124
Alison Clark
Introduction	124
An island landscape	125
Crafting with the wind	125
First steps	126
Improvisation	127
Swallow flight	128
Playful engagement with time, place, and nature	129
Slow knowledge and the unhurried student	129
Deepening children’s relationship with place, time, and nature.	130
Extending children’s relationship with place through photography	132
Responding when nature intervenes	133
Conclusion	134
References.	134
8. The wind-kite-me – an explorative essay about kite flying and crafting with nature.	137
Kari Carlsen
Prelude – before the play begins	137
The text	141
The kite	142
The place	145
The materials	146
The tool	150
The hand	153
The wind-kite-me	155
References.	156
9. Writing companions – cat-writing as a pedagogy of messy interspecies entanglements	158
Aino-Kaisa Koistinen
Introduction: This mess we’re in	158
Taking human–cat relations seriously	160
Feline politics and the trouble with representation	161

The monstrous poetics of cat-writing	164
From representation to practice – or how caring for a carnivore turned me vegan	166
Vegan poetics and monstrous interruptions	169
The messy pedagogy of cat-writing	171
Acknowledgements	173
References	173
10. “You really are a thing!”: Queering relations with the more-than-human world	176
Henrika Ylirisku and Tomi Slotte Dufva
Introduction	176
Being as entanglement	178
Crafting as a speculative middle	181
Artistic experiment	182
Discussion	186
Crafting with the digital	187
The engagement with the strange device	188
Questions relating to queering and next steps	190
References	192
11. All things speak! An eco-animism of co-crafting with other-than-humans in outdoor life (friluftsliv)	195
Per Ingvar Haukeland
Introduction	196
Co-crafting things back to life	196
Co-crafting ways in outdoor life	198
An ecophilosophy of co-crafting	202
Eco-animism	204
The ecological selves of all things	207
Co-crafting a pair of skis	208
Wayfaring onward	213
References	215
Authors	219